► ELECTION COSTS

Costs of elections have gone up with rollout of new electronic voting equipment. A 2002 federal law leads to demise of punch card voting.

► ELECTRONIC VOTING EQUIPMENT SURVIVES HAND RECOUNT

September recount in primary auditor's race boosts public confidence.

► ADDITIONAL POLL WORKERS NEEDED

The challenge an aging poll worker population presents to election administrators is daunting.

“An Act to establish a program to provide funds to States to replace punch card voting systems...” These opening words to the 2002 HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT (HAVA) are every bit as familiar to U.S. Election Administrators as the Preamble to the U. S. Constitution is to a student of American government.

While Congress didn't tell us what equipment to buy, the law required that we transition from punch card voting by the August 2006 Primary Election. Our studies of other jurisdictions that had already deployed new electronic voting indicated that given the choice voters preferred to use the touch screen over optical scan equipment. Our available HAVA grant would not finance the purchase of a touch screen only voting system, so by the end of 2005 we had settled on a “blended” system using both touch screen and optical-scan voting machines. The blended system provides that in federal elections, when we experience higher voter turnout, we would use both machine types; using only touch screen machines, with a high speed scanner to count mail absentee votes, in other elections with a lower voter turnout. A federal grant of $9.8M financed the purchase of 1,850 iVotronic touch screens and 500 paper ballot scanners from Elections Systems & Software (ES&S).

St. Louis County government appropriated additional money to rent 10,000 sq. ft. of adjoining office and warehouse space, allowing the Board of Elections to build a training center and storage area for the new equipment, including the addition of a mezzanine over a portion of our existing warehouse.

The original plan to rollout our new electronic voting system in April 2006 was quickly scrapped as equipment contracts were negotiated and the enormity of the transition from our old central count punch card system to precinct count began to sink in.

On August 7th, the first election of 2006 with federal candidates on the ballot — and a HAVA deadline — St. Louis County voters inaugurated the electronic voting era with 98% of the voters on Election Day opting to use touch screen equipment rather than the optical-scan option. Electronic voting in St. Louis County had thus begun! This change to electronic voting was the first substantive change in voting equipment since the introduction of punch card voting in 1975.

When final primary results were certified by the Secretary of State, the vote difference in the Republican State Auditor's race was within one percent, triggering a recount. On September 5th, as the lawyers and campaign representatives gathered around, we recounted the 40,199 touch screen and 2,375 optical-scan ballots cast in that primary. A visual review of the paper trail created by the touch screen machines resulted in not a single vote change, while two votes were added upon review of the optical scan ballots because the voters had failed to properly mark the ballot. While state-wide manual recounts are not something election officials hope to experience, this recount gave us the opportunity to prove the integrity of our new equipment. The new electronic voting equipment had passed its first test.

And while we've said goodbye to Chad, who became a household word following the 2000 presidential punch card election, the new technology has not come without a cost. Although the federal government covered the considerable price of the initial equipment acquisition, there will be increased ongoing operating costs that will have to be funded by state, county and local governments.

First, the punch cards that fell into disrepute in the 2000 presidential election in Florida were relatively inexpensive. The last punch card ballots we purchased were billed at six cents each. If they weren't used in one election, they were put on a shelf to be used in the next. Bottom line - there was zero waste. Not so with optical-scan ballots. Pre-printed with candidates' names and ballot issues, at a cost of twenty-five to forty cents apiece, the unused optical-scan ballots go to the waste recycler after each election. By maximizing the use of touch screen, and minimizing the optical-scan ballots when possible, we sought to reduce the ongoing ballot cost while keeping the initial equipment purchase cost within the HAVA grant budget.

Second, the higher tech equipment needs more logistical support, especially on Election Day. In August we had 58 technicians in the field to handle service calls. For the 2008 General Election year we anticipate using 100 per election. This level of support will be needed until our poll workers, including the new equipment specialists, get proficient with the equipment.

Third, poll worker salaries are another area that saw a significant increase as we headed into 2007. To attract and keep good election workers we proposed (and the County approved) a pay hike of $30 for supervisors and assistant supervisors, and $15 for other poll workers. Training costs are also on the upswing although the initial poll worker training on the new equipment was funded with another HAVA grant. As with the price of gasoline, election costs seem to know only one direction, and that's up!

Our summary of costs for the last six general election years, on page 13, depicts the election cost trend.

With our new poll worker training center finally up and running at our Maplewood facility, our emphasis during 2007 and 2008 will be to upgrade the skills of our pool of 5,000+ Election Day workers to be better able to manage a 21st Century voting location.

While it's true many of our poll workers have been on the job for 25-30 years, they nonetheless remain the backbone of our Election Day operation. But their ranks are dwindling and they need help. To this end we will be making a concerted effort to recruit people currently in the workforce to help with the 2008 presidential election year. The ideal candidate will have the skills needed to fill an office clerical position, where turning on a computer is as natural as brewing a pot of coffee; and changing a paper roll in a touch-screen voting machine is no different than replacing a toner cartridge in an office copier.

The challenge an aging poll worker population presents to election administrators across the U.S. is daunting. To make the life of our poll workers easier, in 2008 we will be introducing a handheld electronic database in each of our polling places to assist the poll worker in verifying the address and registration of voters whose names are not in the binder. This will remove a bottleneck caused by election workers calling our office to check a registration status. Technology, well planned out and closely administered, will alleviate some of the frustration for the voter negotiating long lines at the polls in 2008.

If HAVA has done nothing else, it has forced America's Election Administrators to come to terms with 21st century technology. Whether we're talking about a statewide voter database or computer voting, it can't help but make the system more accurate, more efficient and user friendly.

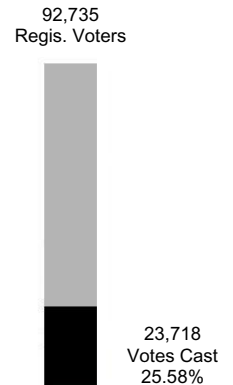

Respectfully,

Joseph A. Goeke, III

HAVA FUNDS

Where the Money Went

In 2002 Congress passed the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) in response to the equipment and administrative shortcomings that became apparent in the 2000 presidential election in Florida. This was the most comprehensive federal legislation ever enacted the recommendations of Congress (and expen- sive), the federal government ap- plicated among the states to imple- received $62.26 million, which the Secretary of State. St. Louis County's share of the pie was $10.38 million.

Because were so far-reaching (and expen- appropriated $3.9 billion to be allo- ment those guidelines. Missouri was administered by the office of Missouri's 116 election authorities include its 114 counties, plus the cities of St. Louis and Kansas City. Unlike St. Louis, which is not in a county, Kansas City is in parts of four counties — Platt, Clay, Jackson and Cass — but its election board covers only the Jackson County portion.

St. Louis County History

By Robert A. Cohn

Formation of the County

St. Louis County came into existence just nine years after the Louisiana Purchase and nine years before Missouri attained statehood. After their historic exploration of the Louisiana Purchase and beyond, both Meriwether Lewis and William Clark served as territorial governors of the area that included Missouri. On October 1, 1812, Governor William Clark organized the five administrative districts of Upper Louisiana Territory into counties, one of which was St. Louis County. In 1818, still prior to Missouri statehood, Franklin and Jefferson counties were formed out of the original St. Louis County, leaving St. Louis County with the land that today comprises the City of St. Louis and St. Louis County.

The City of St. Louis was thirty-nine years old at the time of the Louisiana Purchase. It was founded in 1764, the year following the end of the French and Indian War and the Treaty of Paris, which transferred France's claims west of the Mississippi River to Spain. Although the area was nominally Spanish, the founders of St. Louis were French settlers from New Orleans.

The first permanent European settlement in what is now St. Louis County was Florissant in 1785, also a French community. Creve Coeur also existed at the time of the Louisiana Purchase. In 1804, the combined population of the St. Louis district of Upper Louisiana (including St. Louis City, St. Louis County and Franklin and Jefferson counties) was estimated to be 2,780, including 500 slaves.

City/County Separation or "The Great Divorce"

The separation of St. Louis City from St. Louis County occurred in 1876. At that time, the split was strongly advocated by city leaders who felt the non-urban parts of the County were an undue burden on the urbanized and prosperous City of St. Louis.

Prior to 1876, there was great resentment of the County's taxation policies at a time when the City had large expenses in extending urban infrastructure to its rapidly growing population. A former mayor of St. Louis, John F. Darby, accused the County Court of "a great wrong in imposing an exorbitant tax on the people of St. Louis County, and of enormous, unjustifiable and scandalous waste of public money," (John F. Darby, Personal Recollections, St. Louis, 1880, p. 437.) A Taxpayers' League, formed in 1872, was very critical of the County Court's operations and gave impetus to the movement for separation from the County.

The plan of separation was drafted by a Board of Freeholders authorized by Missouri's revised Constitution of 1875. That Constitution also authorized an extension of the city limits of St. Louis and gave the City the right to formulate its own home rule charter.

New City boundaries were adopted over the objections of some who asserted that the city would never extend that far west. The boundaries were moved from the old limit just west of Grand Boulevard to a new limit west of Skinker Boulevard, thereby taking in newly acquired Forest Park and increasing the size of the City from 17.98 square miles to its present 61.37 square miles. That left St. Louis County at its present size of 524 square miles. The newly separated County had a population of 31,888, the third largest in Missouri. It had a few small urban centers but was still predominantly rural.

Selection of a County Seat

After the separation of St. Louis City from St. Louis County, early meetings of the new County Court, as the policy-making body was called, were held first at a home in Maplewood, then at two locations in what is now Des Peres. The first building to accommodate both the County Court meetings and County records and offices was Mt. Olive House, a large three-story brick building which had been built in 1860 as a summer resort on Olive Street Road., just east of the intersection with North and South Road. The County Court met there for two years and even used part of the building as a jail while other parts of the building continued to be operated as a hotel, post office, and a printing office.

The selection of a permanent County seat was the responsibility of a Commission established by the new charter. After considering several locations, including Florissant, they selected a 104-acre site on Hanley Road donated by Ralph Clayton and Martin F. Hanley. After a successful election approving the location in 1877 they platted the site on which two main buildings of the County government center are located today — the block bordered by Central, Carondelet, and Meramec avenues and Forsyth Boulevard (originally called St. Ferdinand).

The County Courthouses of St. Louis County

An interesting fact of St. Louis County Courthouse history is that the first permanent (not rented) courthouse for St. Louis County was what is now known as the Old Courthouse in downtown St. Louis., the site of the famous Dred Scott trial and now a part of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial. It was built on land donated in 1823 by Auguste Chouteau and J.B.C. Lucas, two distinguished citizens. The original courthouse was completed in 1833 and was located where the east wing of the building is situated. The building was expanded in 1839, and the rotunda, dome, and west wing were built in 1843. In 1851, the original east wing was demolished, and in 1856 a new east wing replaced it.

Following separation and selection of Clayton as the county seat, a courthouse and jail were built in December 1878. The original building was expanded in 1912 and 1926. After 20 years of defeating bond issue proposals, County voters in 1945 approved a bond issue for a new courthouse building facing Forsyth Boulevard, and that building was completed in 1949. A change in state law allowing the construction of jail facilities outside the county seat made possible the construction of the Adult Correctional Institution in Gumbo, completed in 1969. Having relieved severe jail overcrowding and inadequacy, County government succeeded in passing a bond issue for the construction of the ten-story Administration Building, the six-story Courts building, and a 1200-car garage. These improvements were completed in 1972.

Since the construction of the Adult Correctional Institution in the 1960s, when land costs in Clayton were considered prohibitive, continued jail overcrowding and deterioration of the remaining jail facilities in Clayton created pressure for new correctional facilities. In choosing a site for new facilities the costs and difficulties of continually transporting prisoners between jail facilities in far west County and court facilities in Clayton weighed in favor of a Clayton site for a new jail and expanded Court facilities. The new Justice Center, which opened in 1998, is connected to the Courts Building by a secure skywalk and replaces both the jail in the 1949 Courthouse building and the Adult Correctional Building in Chesterfield.

Form of Government

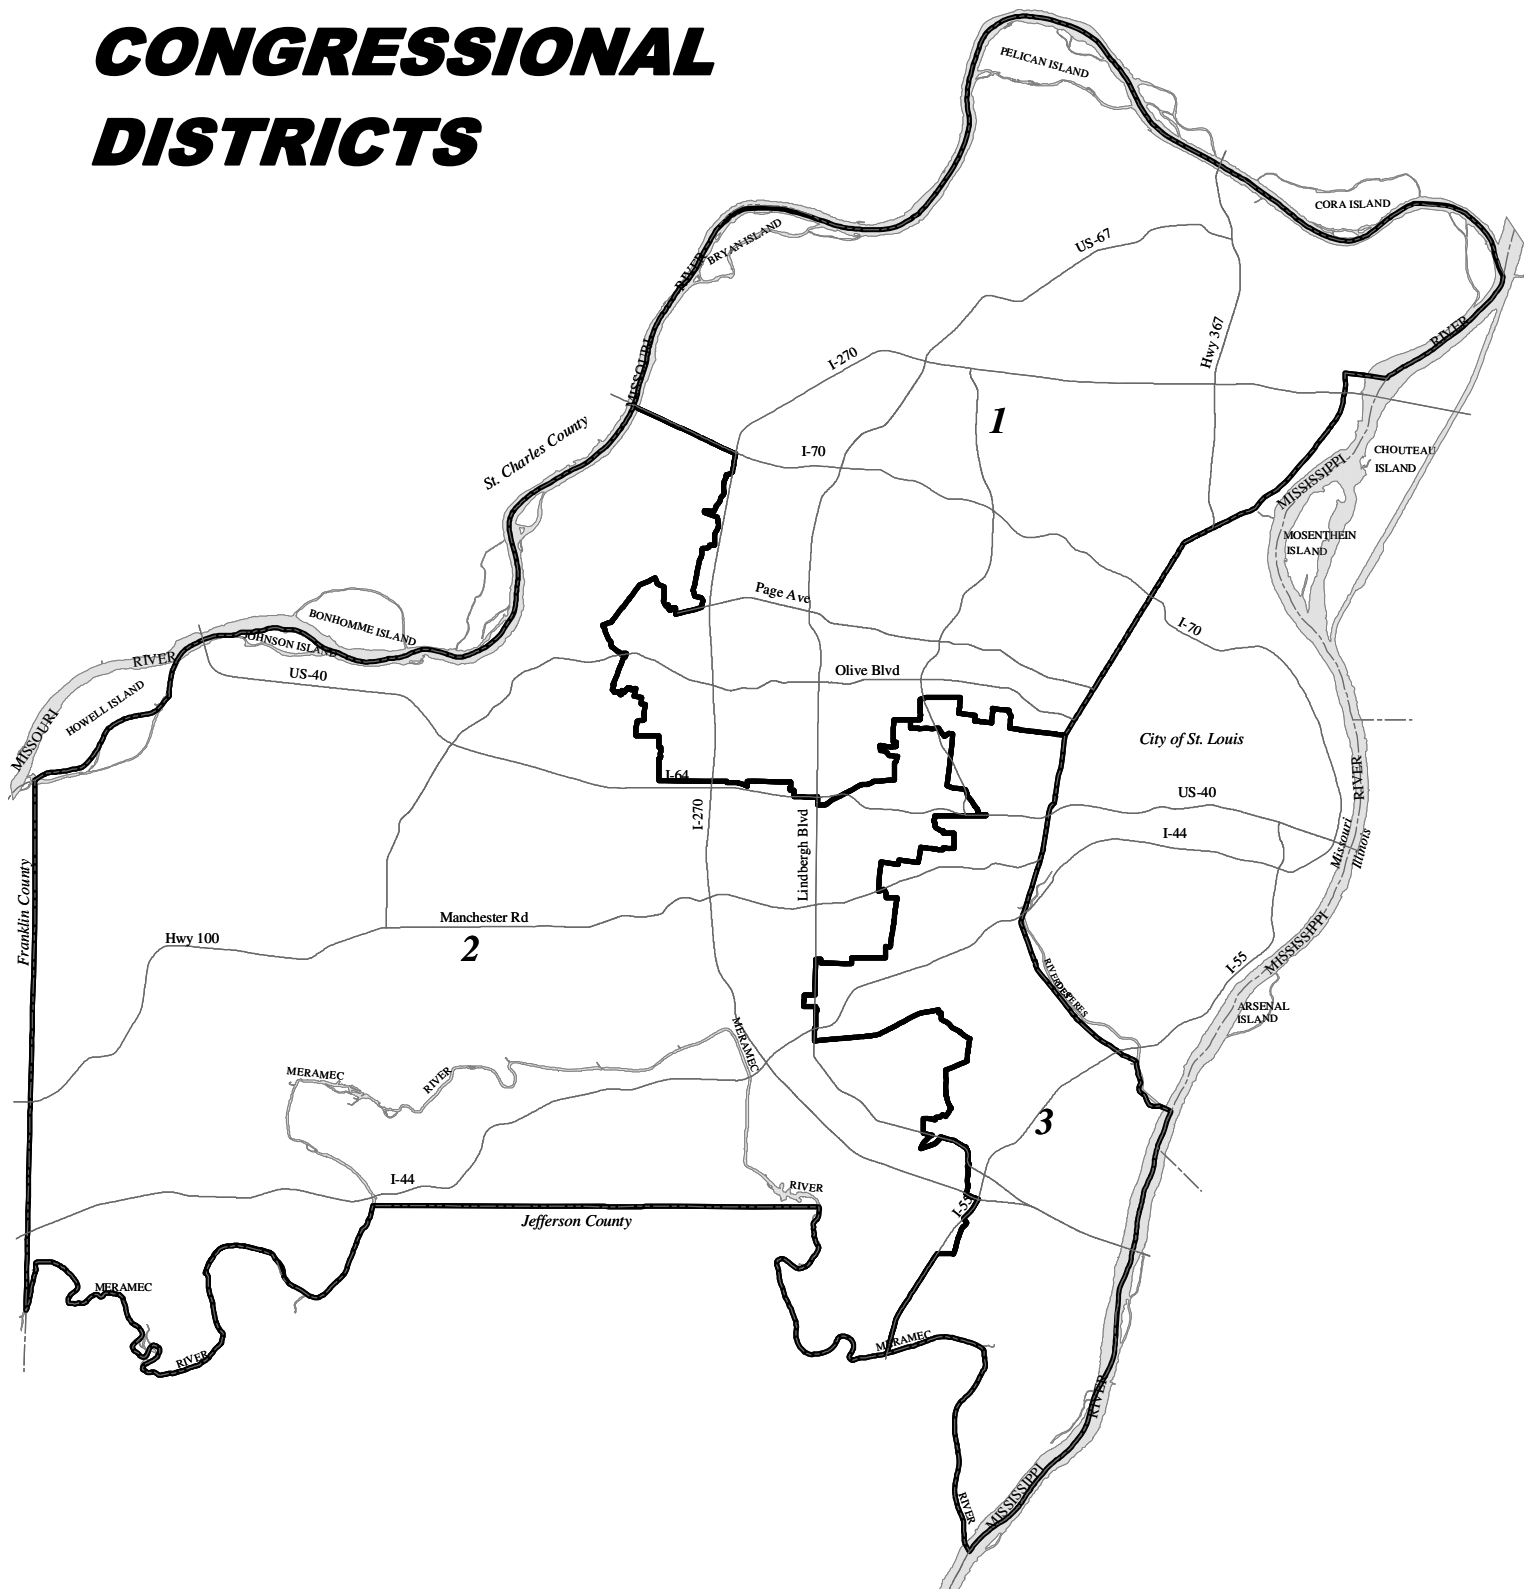

From 1877 until 1950, St. Louis County's governing body was the three-judge County Court, a quasi-legislative and executive body consisting of a presiding judge elected at large and two associate judges elected from separate geographic districts. By 1950, this structure had been long criticized as antiquated and unsuitable for an urban county. The County Court's authority over other agencies in the County was severely limited. There were more than a dozen independently elected county officials that were not directly accountable to the County Court; those included the Sheriff, Recorder of Deeds, County Clerk, Circuit Clerk, County Highway Engineer, Constables, Superintendent of Schools, and Public Administrator.

In 1945 Missouri voters adopted a constitutional change which allowed counties of more than 85,000 people to reorganize their government under a home rule charter. A Charter Commission proposed a major overhaul of the government creating the position of County Supervisor as full-time paid executive and a separate seven-member County Council, with members elected from seven districts. The first home-rule charter, which was adopted in 1950, created eleven County departments but left sixteen positions elected on a partisan basis. Subsequent amendments to the 1950 charter reduced the number of elective offices and authorized a merit system for County employees. Actions taken under the 1950 Charter in response to rapid growth of the County included the creation of the St. Louis County Police Department and adoption of a master zoning ordinance and modern building codes.

The present St. Louis County Charter was adopted in 1968, partly in response to problems relating to lack of control over the independently elected Sheriff, County Treasurer, and Recorder of Deeds. The new charter left only the County Supervisor (now County Executive), the seven County Council members, and the Prosecuting Attorney as elective officials. Government department heads are appointed by the County Executive with the approval of the Council.
